
Notes on Contributors

Prisca Greenhow's academic career began as a mature student whilst on a career break following the birth of her children. After taking an Access course she gained a degree in history at Anglia Ruskin University, and then studied for the Master of Studies in Local History at the Institute of Continuing Education, Cambridge University, examining the Old Poor Law in Huntingdonshire. After a brief return to the Civil Service, she trained as a nurse. Three years ago she began her PhD supervised by Professor Steven King at Leicester University, this time studying the Old Poor Law in Norfolk.

Sue Jones is a doctoral candidate at the University of Oxford's Continuing Education Department. Her research takes a 'big data' approach to exploring at the local level (using evidence from Surrey's non-metropolitan parishes) early modern England's interconnected demographic and economic systems, including consideration of continuity and change in geographical patterns of agriculture, mortality, migration and population.

Peter M. Solar, now retired, taught economics at Vesalius College, Vrije Universiteit Brussel and at Université Saint-Louis—Bruxelles. He is still actively researching the pre-famine Irish economy and the British cotton, linen and shipping industries during the industrial revolution.