
Notes on Contributors

Cathy Day completed her PhD in biological anthropology at the Australian National University in 2010. She is Research Manager at the National Centre for Epidemiology and Population Health at the Australian National University. She published a previous paper entitled ‘Geographical mobility in Wiltshire, 1754–1914’ in Local Population Studies, 88 (2012), pp. 50–75.

Chris Galley has been a member of the Editorial Board of Local Population Studies since 2001. He is an ex-teacher and amateur (unpaid) demographer who has published widely on population history. He is the author of The Demography of Early Modern Towns (Liverpool, 1998) and co-author (with Robert Woods) of Mrs Stone and Dr Smellie: Eighteenth-Century Midwives and their Patients (Liverpool, 2014).

Marion R. Hardy, a former geography teacher, used a Goldsmiths’ Company’s Teachers’ Travel Award to visit Newfoundland and Labrador in 1991. In retirement, these interests led to part-time study for an MA in English Local History at the University of Leicester in 2010, and further part-time study for a PhD in History at the University of Exeter, which she completed in 2017.

Dave Postles was appointed Marc Fitch Research Fellow at the University of Leicester in 1988. He took early retirement in 2005, although he held a University Research Fellowship in the School of English at Leicester from 2005 to 2010. Until recently, he was Honorary Senior Research Fellow at the University of Hertfordshire. He has published extensively on the social and economic history of medieval England.

Sarah L. Rafferty is a PhD student at the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure, University of Cambridge. Her doctoral research focuses on the improvement of infant mortality in London during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.